

ABSTRACT

Methods and systems for promoting communications between a web-enabled digital imaging device and an on-line digital imaging services site are provided. In accordance with embodiments of the system, the device at least includes a microcontroller for executing client-ware and memory for storing a set of information defining a user profile. The user profile includes identification and preference information that is utilized to establish a connection between the device and the imaging services site, and to automatically perform certain imaging services.

10